New name, new face

We hope you like the new name chosen for the alumni newsletter and the marvelous drawing done by TJC's new graphics artist, Josette Cullins, herself and alumna of this institution. But THE APACHE is hardly a new name, is it? We like to keep the rich old traditions with us in the midst of modern technological change.

Foundation makes direct grant

TECH GRANT — President Dr. Raymond M. Hawkins, left, accepts a $4,000 check from Andy Hasty, operations employment coordinator for Otis Engineering Company of Dallas. The grant is from the Halliburton Foundation, Inc. and is to be used in the 1983-84 academic year for faculty support in the TJC technology program. In presenting the check, Hasty said the Foundation makes direct grants primarily to those colleges and universities from which the Halliburton companies employ a substantial number of graduates. "This nation's future depends upon the quality of trained people who come from our colleges and universities," Hasty said. "Halliburton considers its support a prudent investment in the future." Looking on is TJC Dean of Technology Richard Minter.

Phase V

Pirtle Technology Center expansion started

Ground breaking ceremonies for Phase V of the Pirtle Technology Center took place in September, initiating construction of 26,000 square feet of classroom and office space plus 16,000 square feet of a partially finished structure on the third level.

George W. Pirtle, Tyler geologist and philanthropist, turned the first spadeful of dirt for the structural complex which he helped begin in 1966. That was the year the first phase of TJC's school of technology facilities was completed.

Pirtle served on the Board of Trustees of the college from 1956 to 1972, observing and articulating the need for expanded technological programs.

The second phase of the complex was dedicated in 1970 and the building was named the George W. Pirtle Technology Center.

By 1976, the technology student enrollment having more than doubled, Phase III was added, with the assistance of a contribution from Pirtle. The fourth phase came in 1981, bringing the total number of square feet to 66,000.

Cost of the anticipated 42,000 square feet of Phase V is two and one-half million dollars.

Pirtle has also given to scholarships at TJC and the University of Kentucky in addition to his gifts to the Boy Scouts of America, TJC President Dr. Raymond M. Hawkins said, naming a few of Pirtle's benefactions.

Working his way through the University of Kentucky, Pirtle became the first person at that university to earn a teaching fellowship in connection with obtaining his master's degree in science. The geology library at UK is named after him.

Among his many civic honors, Pirtle received the T.B. Butler Publishing Company Award for outstanding community service in 1962.

"Hundreds of youth from Tyler, East Texas and the state have benefited from this man's generous giving to our technology buildings," Hawkins said, "and ties of TJC with industry of the area are strengthened."

Contract for the construction of Phase V was awarded to McKinney and Parker Construction Co. of Tyler. Davis Wilcox of Tyler is the architect.

A NEW BEGINNING — TJC benefactor George M. Pirtle, center, participated in ground breaking ceremonies for Phase V of the Pirtle Technology Center. Aiding Pirtle are

Dr. Eugene Allen, Board of Trustee president, left, and President Dr. Raymond M. Hawkins.
